Plate 1: A copper alloy statue of the Goddess Parvathi from the Chola period circa 11th Century AD (Ramachandran collection). What is unique about this sculpture is that it is not only sensuous and alluring but is also the very epitome of feminine grace, poise, and dignity — combining the seemingly antithetical elements of sexuality and spirituality in a single exquisite masterpiece.

Plate 3: Amorous couple. (Kajuraho, circa 800 A.D.) Sketch by Ramachandran.
Plate 4: A celestial nymph — the rasa of feminine perfection. (Mathura, 800 A.D.). Notice the clever use of abdominal creases and dimples produced by subcutaneous fat — a feminine secondary sexual characteristic. (Replica in Ramachandran Collection.)
Plate 5: Celestial nymphs.

Plate 6: An apsara or nymph twisted into an anatomically impossible but aesthetically pleasing posture. Redrawn by Ramachandran from Fig. 44, Arts of South and South-East Asia, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.)
Plate 7: Amorous couple. Notice the poses are highly ‘improbable’, yet very evocative. The woman elevates her chin to expose her throat — an ethological gesture of complete vulnerability that belies the intense passion on the woman’s face. (Redrawn from Sensuous Immortals by P. Pal, Los Angeles County Museum of Art.)
Plate 8: (a) A drawing of a horse by Nadia, the autistic savant, when she was five years old. (b) A horse drawn by Leonardo da Vinci. (a) reprinted from Nadia, by Lorna Selfe, with permission from Academic Press (New York).

Plate 9: The exaggerated, unnatural languorous pose of a celestial nymph, her various curves creating effects such as ‘grouping’ and ‘closure’. A visual metaphor is set up, between her youthful fertility and the fertility symbolized by the curved bough above her. The effect is mesmerizing. (Redrawn from Gods, Guardians and Angels, Asia Society Museum of San Francisco.)
